Safety: Advocates seek comprehensive prevention effort

Advocates seek comprehensive prevention effort

In a 2011 American College Health Association annual report that surveyed 392,000 college students, 60 percent said that in the last year they had experienced unwanted sexual advance or contact. At least 1 in 4 students had not reported the incident because they didn’t feel comfortable or didn’t feel intrusive, according to the survey.

Most victims of sexual violence are treated from descriptions of law. They have also revised their policies to provide students with more tools to combat sexual violence.

The administration has launched an initiative to undergo sexual assault training.

The University of Oregon has announced plans to create a task force within its sexual assault and violence prevention program that is expected to be formed in the near future.

The task force will be charged with investigating incidents of sexual assault and violence on campus.

The task force will
also be charged with creating a plan to prevent future incidents of
campus.

The task force will
be composed of faculty, staff, and students who will be appointed by the university president.

The task force
will meet on a regular basis to discuss issues related to sexual assault and violence.

will also be responsible for developing policies and procedures to prevent sexual assault
and violence.

will be supported by a coordinator appointed by the university president.

The coordinator
will be responsible for managing the work of the task force.

for coordinating with other university
entities.

will report to the vice president for
