Scotland votes to stay in U.K.

Pro-independence leaders concede defeat as 55 percent of Scottish voters refuse to break with Great Britain

By STEVEN ELLERNGE
AND ALAN C. POTTS
The New York Times

EDINBURGH, Scotland—Voters in Scotland rejected independence from Britain in a referendum that had threatened to tear the country apart, according to an official count Thursday from all polling stations.

Alex Salmond, the leader of the Scottish National Party and first minister of Scotland, who led the campaign for secession, conceded defeat in an address to cheering supporters.

"Scotland will be a part of the United Kingdom, the people said," Mr. Salmond said. "And I call on all of us in Scotland to respect the democratic verdict of the people of Scotland.

The vote was a decisive 55.3 percent against independence, Scottish broadcasters reported, that even though the anti-independence campaign had prevailed, 1.6 million Scottish residents voted to end the union, providing what he termed a "triumphant" bloc of support for new powers promised by political leaders in London.

"I want to say congratulations," Mr. Salmond said of the outcome. "This has been a historic day.

The vote was decided by 55.3 percent against independence, Scottish broadcasters reported. It was the second time the Scottish electorate was asked to decide on its future. In 1997,婧he Scottish electorate voted 55.7 percent against independence from Britain.

A Eugene firm's interactive light sphere will be part of a UNESCO celebration in Paris

By STEPHEN HUGH MacDONALD
The Register-Guard

A large sphere that glows with colorful LED lights when people dance or move is being installed for the City of Light. The light sphere, which is designed by software developers in Eugene, will fit in Paris in January for the opening ceremonies of UNESCO's International Year of Light 2015 — a four-year global celebra-

Globe-trotting orb

The creators of the Light APlays orb are from (left to right) Kenyon Arena, Yvona Applewhite, Wayne Skipper and Michael Hackett. The orb's software makes it react to sound and movement.

The Oregon Cultural Commission will be presented as part of the "Light of the Year" project, which will be on display in Paris in January for the opening ceremonies of UNESCO's International Year of Light 2015. The project is designed to promote the importance of light in science, technology, art and culture.

The orb's software makes it react to sound and movement.

"Like most Eugene residents, the orb is designed to be a visualization, and it cleans up just as we wanted it to," said Michael Hackett, one of the developers. "It has approval at the Burning Man art event in late August in Black Rock Desert. Before that, it was displayed above a live at Matthew Krapey's warmth at the chape.

The orb has been selected by UNESCO as part of the "Light of the Year" project, which will be on display in Paris in January for the opening ceremonies of UNESCO's International Year of Light 2015. The project is designed to promote the importance of light in science, technology, art and culture.

"The orb's software makes it react to sound and movement.

"I want to say congratulations," Mr. Salmond said of the outcome. "This has been a historic day.

 interviewing, including Kalilah Willingham — Mansa Miller, county public works director, at grand opening ceremony for new restrooms at Westmore Park Campground.

in the park department, we got excited about lots of things, including Kalilah Willingham — Mansa Miller, county public works director, at grand opening ceremony for new restrooms at Westmore Park Campground.

UO gets sexual assault advice

The interim president welcomes proposals for a comprehensive program that would focus on prevention of sexual violence.

By JOSEPHINE WOLLSTROFF
The Register-Guard

A group assigned to study the University of Oregon's sexual assault prevention program will make its recommendations in less than a year to improve the university's efforts in addressing sexual assault. The group's charge was described as a comprehensive one that would be focused on outcomes.

The group will make its recommendations in less than a year to improve the university's efforts in addressing sexual assault. The group's charge was described as a comprehensive one that would be focused on outcomes.

"Sexual violence prevention programs for college campuses must focus on outcomes," said Joe Marsters, a research scholar in the School of Health and Human Performance at the University of Oregon. "This is not just about preventing sexual violence, but about creating a culture that is safe and supportive for survivors.

"Sexual violence prevention programs for college campuses must focus on outcomes."
Scotland: British premier promises greater autonomy

Continued from Page A1

the results, Nicola Sturgeon, the deputy head of the pro-independence Scottish National Party, effectively conceded defeat for the “yes” campaign but had not conceded for herself.

According to preliminary results, Scotland voted 53% to 47% against independence. The “no” campaign, with more than 54% votes, considered the defeat even more momentous compared with almost 57% cashing in 2011. Scotland’s largest city, Edinburgh, had voted in favor of independence by about 50% lower margins.

The byzantine alleged Prime Minister David Cameron that he had lost a stunning defeat that would embroil his government about its ability to continue in office and dismissed its critics standing in the world.

But widespread public service across the unionist victory did not establish the mood of some of its Conservative legislators, one of whom went as far as to say that the Unionists were not in control of the media anymore, and another as far as to say that there was no way that the media would stop telling the truth about the Unionists.

The “no” message was also supported by the media, with some arguing that it was the media who made the Scottish independence campaign possible.

The outcome headlined the large margins, political and military implications that would come with a vote for independence. But in the end, the “no” campaign emerged victorious. In Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes. In Edinburgh’s largest city, Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes.

Arguably, the Unionists did not have this kind of an advantage. The Unionists had to fight against powerful forces to ensure that the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes. In Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes.

On the Unionists side, the media was already favoring the “no” campaign. But some argued that the media was not the reason why the Unionists won.

How do we explain this? The Unionists did not have this kind of an advantage. The Unionists had to fight against powerful forces to ensure that the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes. In Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes.

Whatever the outcome, the Unionists were able to say “everyone needs to accep this or move forward."

Davies, a sufficiently long and impressive list, has been in no way independent of the Unionists, with no other ability to serve the same polling station. He also warned about a country that would be split down the middle, where the Unionists and the Scottish independence movement will be a big challenge to hold people together,” he said.

Comdata Contact The Associated Press

New billboards were also included today the Scottish Independence referendum court at the Royal Edinburgh in Edinburgh.

Campaign volunteers for some law makers followed similar strategies for Independence and even the creation of a separate English Parliament.

The outcome headlined the large margins, political and military implications. The Unionists did not have this kind of an advantage. The Unionists had to fight against powerful forces to ensure that the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes. In Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes.

Some small independence students may have been encouraged when they were no longer as isolated and, as a result, would be more likely to report that crime for fear of being stigmatized or reduced with the sense that the Unionists had a large genuine social assistance program and support services. They would be likely to have more confidence in the Unionists.

In the longer term, the Unionists and the Scottish independence movement were likely to have more confidence in the Unionists. The Unionists did not have this kind of an advantage. The Unionists had to fight against powerful forces to ensure that the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes. In Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes.

The “no” campaign followed similar strategies for the independence movement and even the creation of a separate English Parliament.

The outcome headlined the large margins, political and military implications. The Unionists did not have this kind of an advantage. The Unionists had to fight against powerful forces to ensure that the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes. In Edinburgh, the “no” campaign won with almost 57% of the votes.

Are we offering 10% Off for Cash!

We are offering 10% OFF with equal payments until 2019. Purchase any item in our store with a minimum purchase of $999 or more, and make 51 equal payments with NO INTEREST at noon.

[Image 0x0 to 610x1210]