ABOUT TONIGHT’S ARTISTS

Aashish Khan was initiated into North Indian Classical Music at the age of five by his grandfather, the legendary Acharya Baba Allauddin Khan Sahib, exponent of the Senia Beenkar and Senia Rababiya Gharana (stylistic school or lineage) founded in the 16th Century by Mian Tansen, court musician to Emperor Akbar. He also learned music under the guidance of his father, Ustad Ali Akbar Khan (April 14, 1922–June 18, 2009), and aunt, Smt. Annapurna Devi, the leading exponents of the Senia Maihar Gharana in the Beenkar and Rababiya Anga (style) based on the Dhrupad genre of vocal music.

Aashish gave his first public performance at the age of 13 with his grandfather, on All India Radio in New Delhi, with Pandit Kanthe Maharaj on tabla. In that same year, 1953, he performed with his father and grandfather at the Tansen Music Conference in Calcutta. In 1961 he accompanied his father Ustad Ali Akbar Khan to the East West Music Encounter in Tokyo, Japan. In 1967 he played a sarod duet with his father at the Hollywood Bowl in Los Angeles for an audience of over 20,000 people. Since then, he has performed throughout India and the world, not only with his father but also as a soloist in his own right. He was recognized in 1996 with the “Best Sarod Player” award from the All India Critics Association.

Aashish has collaborated with Pandit Ravi Shankar on many musical projects, including the films of Satyajit Ray, Sir Richard Attenborough’s Gandhi, John Houston’s The Man Who Would Be King, Clint Eastwood’s Breezy, David Lean’s A Passage to India, and Ismail Merchant’s The Mystic Masseur. He also composed the music for Tapan Sinha’s films Aadmi aur Aurat and Joturgriha, for which he received the “Best Film Score Award” from the Bengal Film Journalist’s Association. In 1989/90 Aashish was appointed to the prestigious post of Composer and Conductor for the National Orchestra “Vadya Vrinda” of All India Radio, New Delhi, succeeding such musical stalwarts as Pandit Ravi Shankar and Pandit Panna lal Ghosh. In 2005 he received the Sangeet Natak Academy award from the President of India Dr. A.P. Kalam, one of most prestigious awards for Indian classical musicians.

Aashish has been a faculty member at the Ali Akbar College of Music in Calcutta, India and San Rafael, California: Ravi Shankar’s Kinnara School of Indian Classical Music in Los Angeles; the University of Washington in Seattle; and the University of Alberta in Edmonton, Canada. In 1978 Aashish and his brother Pranesh Khan founded the Allauddin Academy of Music and Performing Arts in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. He teaches students throughout the United States, Canada, Europe, South Africa and India, while pursuing a busy career as a concert artist and composer. He is currently a faculty member at the California Institute of the Arts in Valencia, California, where he has been awarded the Nicholas England Chair.

Pranesh Khan is the younger brother of Aashish Khan, and was also initiated into music by their grandfather, the legendary Baba Allauddin Khan. Later he had the honor of studying with tabla masters Pandit Shankar Ghosh, Ustad Alla Rakha, and Ustad Zakir Hussain. He is currently a disciple of Pandit Swapan Chaudhuri. Pranesh was immersed in a rich musical environment as a child and began his own career by playing tabla and other folk drums of India. He has accompanied many of the principal figures in Indian classical music. He is internationally active as a tabla player through his collaborations with Western musicians in movie soundtracks and fusion projects.
