

Psych 410/510: Psychology of Religion Syllabus Winter 2007

Instructor Information:

Instructor: Robert C. Gordon, Ph.D.

Lectures: 9 a.m. M W F 146 Straub Hall

Office Hours: Monday 11-12 Tuesday 12-1 Thursday 1-2

Instructor Office: 356 Straub Hall

Instructor email: rcgordon@uoregon.edu

Instructor Phone: 346-4819

Graduate Teaching Fellow: Sonia Venkatraman

GTF email: sven@uoregon.edu

GTF Phone: 346-4937

Course Description

Religion is one of the most powerful forces animating the world today. This course will explore the psychology behind this propulsive power. The course will not only introduce students to classic figures in the field such as William James, Sigmund Freud, Carl Jung, and Abraham Maslow, it will also explore why individuals become so strongly wedded to their religious beliefs, and the ways in which religious institutions channel human activity. Finally, it will examine the rise of religiously inspired terrorism, and its implications for the future.

The course will approach psychology of religion from three different but complementary perspectives -- phenomenological, empirical and sociological. The first part of the course will study psychology of religion from a phenomenological perspective. This approach will help us understand just what we mean by religious experience considered psychologically. Our phenomenological exploration will depend heavily on William James' classic The Varieties of Religious Experience. It has been said that all of Western philosophy is a footnote to Plato. It can equally as well be said that all of the psychology of religion is a footnote to William James because he explores most of the salient issues that have become important to the field. Students will also have the opportunity to study James' Pragmatism. He is well known for his pragmatic assessment of religion, holding that if religious beliefs and practices produce positive practical effects, then that fact is grounds for considering religious beliefs to be true. Students will learn how significantly James' pragmatic approach has influenced empirical studies in the psychology of religion.

The second phase of the course will study the empirical approach to psychology of religion. It will center on the question: How do we measure religious experience and its effects? It will explore methodological and ethical issues unique to the psychology of religion, explicating how it is that we can scientifically measure religious attitudes, thoughts, behaviors and experiences. It will present psychological research concerning religion and human development, mystical experience, conversion, new religious movements, mental/physical health, and personality and religion.

The final phase of the course will explore psychology of religion from a sociological perspective. It will center on the question: What are the social effects of individual religious psychologies? This section of the course will be concerned with studying how individual religious belief translates into group action AND how the religious ideology of the group shapes the religious psychology of the individual. It will briefly survey the history of the religions of Abraham – Judaism, Christianity, and Islam – and the socio-political effects of their ideology of religious conquest.

Finally, insights from the phenomenological, empirical and social approaches to the psychology of religion will inform an examination of the roots and rise of religious terrorism.

Required Textbooks:

Eric Hoffer, The True Believer

William James, The Varieties of Religious Experience

Raymond Paloutzian, Invitation to the Psychology of Religion

Grading:

Grades will be based on a mid-term examination (1/3 of your grade), a final examination (1/3 of your grade), and a 5-8 page research paper (1/3 of your grade). Details of the requirements for the research paper will be presented in class.

Schedule of Lectures

Week I (Jan 8 – Jan 12)

General Introduction and Religious Autobiography

Pragmatism and Religion

Institutional Religion vs Individual Religious Experience

The Religion of Healthy-Mindedness

Reading: James, Varieties, (pp. 1-95).

Week II (Jan 15 – Jan 19)

Martin Luther King Day (No Class)

The Sick Soul

The Divided Self, and the Process of Unification

Reading: James, Varieties, (pp. 96 –192).

Week III (Jan 22 – Jan 26)

Conversion

Saintliness

Mysticism

Reading: James, Varieties, (pp. 193 – 318).

Week IV (Jan 29 – Feb 2)

Sacrifice, Confession, and Prayer
William James and the Future of Religion
Sigmund Freud and the Origins of Religion

Reading: James, Varieties, (pp.339 – 390).

Week V (Feb 5 – Feb 9)

Freud and the Future of an Illusion
Carl Jung, Abraham Maslow and the Search for Peak Experience
Mid-Term Examination (Friday Feb 9)

Reading: (No Assignment – review James for mid-term)

Week VI (Feb 12 – Feb 16)

Empiricism and the Psychology of Religion
Historical and Theoretical Developments
Social Influence Theory

Reading: Paloutzian, Invitation, (pp. 1 – 80).

Week VII (Feb 19 – Feb 23)

Religious Orientation, Attitudes, and Behavior
Religion and Health
The Neurophysiology of Mysticism

Reading: Paloutzian, Invitation, (pp. 81 – 174).

Week VIII (Feb 26 – Mar 2)

Deuteronomy and the Traditions of Abraham
Christianity and Religious Conquest
Jihad and the Expansion of Islam

Reading: Paloutzian, Invitation, (pp. 175 – 270).

Week IX (Mar 5 – Mar 9)

The Psychology of the True Believer
Faith and Mass Movements
Religion and Political Action

Reading: Hoffer, True Believer, (pp. 1 – 53).

Week X (Mar 12– Mar 16)

Contemporary Culture and Religious Violence
Religion and Cultural Coexistence
Future Religious Possibilities

Reading: Hoffer, True Believer, (pp. 54 – 168).

Finals Week (March 19 – March 23)

Final Examination: Wednesday March 21 @ 10:15 a.m.