UO Budget Model in a Nutshell.

The University’s new budget model is a responsibility centered management system that governs the budgets of (a) the individual schools and colleges (but not departments therein), (b) the budget for non-GTF central tuition remissions and (c) the total budget of the central administration. There are three steps to the process:

Step I: Overall distribution of revenues.

Tuition Remission (Financial Aid) budget is set at:

9.2% of all tuition.

The COMBINED budgets of the 8 schools and colleges is set at:

All tuition - 9.2% of all tuition - 28% of total S/C expenditures from 2 years earlier.

The central administrative budget is then:

All other revenues + 28% of S/C expenditures from 2 years earlier.

Step II: Distribution to individual schools and colleges.

(A) Undergraduate Tuition: All remaining undergraduate tuition is pooled (regardless of resident vs non-resident). This is then distributed to the S/C as follows:

- 50% by student credit hours
- 30% by Major (prorated for double majors)
- 20% by degrees awarded

(B) Graduate Tuition: The actual tuition dollars paid by a graduate student follow that student directly into the school or college where the student is enrolled in a degree program.

Step III: There is a fixed annual redistribution of the budgets above. As budgets grow, this redistribution will become insignificant.

Under the new budget model the schools and colleges have substantially increased fiscal responsibility. Most of the schools and colleges have substantially increased budgets and all of the schools and colleges have substantially increased opportunities to make decisions that will improve their overall financial health.
