— INTERMISSION —

ALAN REINHARDT, countertenor, is pleased to be in his twelfth season with Chanticleer. He grew up in Long Island, N.Y. and prior to joining sang with various ensembles in New York City including The Men and Boys choir at St. Thomas Church on Fifth Avenue, Early Music New York and choral performances with the N.Y. Philharmonic. In 2005, he sang the lead countertenor role in the premiere of the dance/opera A More Perfect Union in the State Theatre in Perm, Russia as part of the Sergei Diaghilev Festival. Recently, he has been exploring his love of poetry on the website Voetica.com where you can find him reading such classic poets as Robert Frost, Richard Wilbur, Walt Whitman, William Wordsworth, and John Keats. An avid motorcyclist as well, Alan enjoys taking extensive trips in and around California and is a frequent backpacker in the national and state parks of the West coast. Alan holds degrees from SUNY Potsdam and the University of Illinois in Champaign-Urbana.

LOGAN S. SHIELDS, soprano, is elated to begin his second season with Chanticleer. A peculiarly proud Michigander, Mr. Shields has studied vocal performance at Western Michigan University and Grand Valley State University. While living in Grand Rapids, he performed with St. Mark's Episcopal, Schola Choir of the Diocese, and OperaGR. Most recently, he worked with an array of singers from many of America's top choirs in the professional ensemble Audivi, based in Ann Arbor, under the direction of Noah Horn. Outside of the classical realm he has been featured in DownBeat Magazine's Student Music Awards, winning "Best Blues/Pop/Rock Group of 2014" for his contributions on the Aaron Garcia Band's album, Glass Girl. Other passions include craft beer, vegetarianism, absurdism, freestyle rap, pugs, and spending time with his partner, Gabrielle.

ANDREW VAN ALLSBURG, tenor, is thrilled to begin his second season with Chanticleer. Originally from Holland, Michigan, Andrew received his Bachelors of Music Education from Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo, MI. During his undergraduate tenure, Andrew performed with the University Chorale directed by Dr. James Bass, and recorded and released an album of Monteverdi's Vespers of 1610 with the Miami-based professional choir Seraphic Fire directed by Patrick Dupré Quigley. In addition, Andrew conducted the choir of the early music ensemble Collegium Musicum, and won a Downbeat Award with the vocal jazz ensemble, Gold Company, under the direction of the late Dr. Steve Zegree. A versatile performer, Andrew has performed globally for various cruise lines, production companies, contemporary a cappella groups, musicals, and has made TV appearances on the Oprah Winfrey Show and Last Week Tonight with John Oliver. While living in New York City, Andrew sang with Schola Dominicana at the Church of Saint Catherine of Sienna directed by James Wetzel, and was a featured singer in the Radio City Christmas Spectacular featuring the Rockettes, under the musical direction of Kevin Stites. Andrew enjoys traveling, spending time with friends and family, and can throw a mean Frisbee.

ADAM WARD, alto, is originally from Tecumseh, Oklahoma. At an early age Adam became fascinated with the voice of Patsy Cline. As a child he made a number of television appearances singing Cline's songs. Mr. Ward began singing countertenor while studying French horn performance at Yale University. There he was also a founding member of the Yale Schola Cantorum under the direction of Simon Carrington. He has since performed as soloist with the International Contemporary Ensemble and was a member of the Choir of St. Mary the Virgin at the famed "Smoky Mary's" in midtown Manhattan. As a horn player, Adam was a member of the Verbier Festival Orchestra, winner of the concerto competitions at Yale and Stony Brook Universities, and was a top prizewinner at the Coleman, Fischhoff and Yellow Springs national chamber music competitions. As a composer his works have been heard around the world for nearly two decades. He was recently composer-in-residence for the New York City based Choral Chameleon directed by Vince Peterson and the Sacramento based Vox Musica directed by Daniel Paulson. He is also an avid singer-songwriter. Adam holds a B.M. from Manhattan School of Music, M.M. from Yale School of Music and additional years of study at the Hartt School, Royal College of Music (London) and Stony Brook University. Adam is overjoyed to be in his twelfth season with Chanticleer.

Tim holds an AB in Music from Princeton University with certificates in Vocal Performance and Computer Science, an MPhil in Music and Science from Cambridge University, and an MM in Choral Conducting from the University of Michigan. While studying at the University of Michigan, Tim served as assistant conductor of the Grammy award-winning UMS Choral Union, preparing the choir for performances with Leonard Slatkin and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. His dissertation at Cambridge explored statistical methods used in natural language processing and unsupervised machine learning as applied to musical phrase detection and segmentation. This is Tim's first season with Chanticleer. timkeeler.net

MATTHEW KNICKMAN, baritone, is proud to be in his seventh season with Chanticleer. Born in Korea, he started singing as a boy soprano at St. Stephen's Cathedral Choir of Men and Boys in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. He holds degrees in vocal performance and pedagogy from Westminster Choir College. As a member of the critically acclaimed Westminster Choir and Westminster Kantorei, he performed with the New York Philharmonic, Dresden Philharmonic, & New Jersey Symphony, and was led by celebrated conductors, including Alan Gilbert, Lorin Maazel, Kurt Masur, Harry Bicket, Charles Dutoit, Rafael Frühbeck de Burgos, Richard Hickox, Neeme Järvi, Bernard Labadie, Nicholas McGegan, Julius Rudel, Stefan Parkman, Joseph Flummerfelt, and Andrew Megill. He has also performed with Les Violons du Roy et La Chapelle de Québec, Early Music New York, Choir of Trinity Wall Street, Saint Thomas Choir of Men and Boys, Opera Company of Philadelphia, Opera Theatre of Weston, and Spoleto Festival U.S.A. He has been a soloist in numerous oratorios and Bach cantatas, including the St. John and St. Matthew Passions with early music organizations such as Fuma Sacra, Philadelphia Bach Festival, and Carmel Bach Festival. He has also been a Finalist in the Sixth Biennial Bach Vocal Competition for American Singers. Recently, he has performed as a soloist with Santa Clara Chorale, San Jose Chamber Orchestra, and Symphony Silicon Valley. When not singing, Matthew enjoys strawberry ice cream, eating comfort foods around the world, and is an exercise and nutritional science enthusiast.

MATTHEW MAZZOLA, tenor, is thrilled to be joining Chanticleer for his first season. Matthew received his Bachelor in Music Education from the University of Houston. During his undergraduate tenure, he sang with the Moores School of Music's Concert Chorale under the direction of Betsy Cook Weber. He participated with the select group that won first prize ex aequo at the 2013 Marktoberdorf International Chamber Choir Competition, and received three gold medals at the 2015 Grand Prix of Nations competition in Magdeburg, Germany. After finishing his degree, Matthew taught elementary music, and sang professionally with Cantare Houston, Houston Bach Society and Houston Chamber Choir. In his free time, Matthew is an avid gamer, foodie and sports fan.

CORTEZ MITCHELL, countertenor, is a native of Detroit, MI. He graduated from Morgan State University with a B.A. in music and a B.S. in mathematics and holds an M.M. in voice from the University of Cincinnati's College Conservatory of Music. As Minnesota Opera's first resident artist countertenor he performed the role of Cherubino in Mozart's Le nozze di Figaro and covered Nicklauss in Offenbach's Les Contes d'Hoffman. With Urban Opera he performed the role of 1st Witch in Purcell's Dido and Aeneas. He has been featured in solo performances of J.S Bach's Cantata #147 Herz und Mund und Tat und Leben with the Dayton Philharmonic, R. Nathaniels Dett's The Ordering of Moses and Adolphus Hailstork's Done Made My Vow with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Rachmaniov's Vespers in St. Petersburg Russia, and Wynton Marsallis's All Rise with the Lincoln Center Jazz Ensemble. Cortez has received awards from the National Opera Association, The Washington International competition and the Houston Grand Opera Eleanor McCollum competition. Mr. Mitchell is in his eleventh season with Chanticleer.

GERROD PAGENKOPF, countertenor and assistant music director, is excited to be returning for a third season with Chanticleer. A native of Northeast Wisconsin, Gerrod received his Bachelors of music education from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and also holds a Masters degree in vocal performance from the University of Houston where he was a graduate fellow under Katherine Ciesinski. A specialist in early music, Gerrod has performed with many early music ensembles throughout Boston and Houston including Ars Lyrica Houston, the Handel and Haydn Society, Blue Heron Renaissance Choir, Exsultemus, and the prestigious Church of the Advent in Boston's Beacon Hill. In his spare time, Gerrod enjoys exploring the San Francisco Bay Area, geeking out over Handel operas, and discovering local coffee shops while on tour. Gerrod Pagenkopf holds The Ning G. Mercer Chair for the Preservation of the Chanticleer Legacy.

Haec dies - William Byrd (c. 1540 - 1623)

William Byrd was the leading English composer of the late Renaissance period. He became known for his mastery of many different musical genres both sacred and secular. Although he was Catholic, many of his commissioned works were for the Anglican Church, a practice for which he received much scrutiny. However, recognizing the breadth of his talents, Queen Elizabeth I along with many other important figures protected him from prosecution. A loyal subject to his Queen, he served the Church of England at Lincoln Cathedral as organist and choirmaster and in 1572 was given the honorable post of Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, to which he returned for the majority of his long life.

The text of “Haec dies” comes from Psalm 117 and is usually recited at Easter in the Catholic and Anglican traditions. Elizabeth I was a more politically moderate queen than her predecessors, compromising on doctrine just enough to make the Church of England accessible to Catholics as well as Protestants. Despite her efforts of inclusion, the religious landscape of England in the late Renaissance was thick with turmoil. Quite often this conflict was reflected metaphorically in Byrd’s music. During this period of persecution, Catholics had to worship in clandestine services and many English priests were being charged with treason and often executed. One such priest was Edmund Campion, by whom Byrd was inspired to write the motet Deus venerunt gentes, describing the persecution of God’s people and destruction of Jerusalem.

Byrd’s setting of “Haec dies” seems to be in direct opposition to the previous piece. The motet is full of joy and energy with its quickly moving lines and frequent use of hemiola, which adds intriguing rhythmic complexity. The work was published in his collection Cantiones sacrae of 1591, though it was most likely completed at an earlier date. If Byrd’s “Deus venerunt gentes” is a commentary on Edmund Campion’s wrongful and gruesome departure from this world, then “Haec dies” represents Campion’s glorious arrival in Heaven. Being sung on Easter, the piece reminds the faithful of the ultimate battle that Jesus fought to defeat death and serves as a hopeful reminder to rejoice in the life that God has given.

Haec dies quam fecit Dominus:	This is the day the Lord has made:
exultemus et laetemur in ea,	let us rejoice and be glad in it,
Alleluia.	Alleluia.

Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts - Henry Purcell (1659 - 1695)

Considered to be the finest English-born composer of the Baroque Era, Henry Purcell enjoyed a musical success that few of his contemporaries did. Born into a musical family, Purcell was a chorister at the Chapel royal, and held several royal appointments as a young musician. By the mid-1670s, Purcell, now a student of John Blow, was associated very closely with the music at Westminster Abbey. Not only did he write anthems for the royal court, he tuned the organs, copied out vocal partbooks and made such a name for himself that it only seemed natural for him to succeed Blow as organist at the Abbey in 1679. In addition to his duties at the court of William and Mary, Purcell also devoted much of his talent to writing instrumental music (harpsichord suites, sonatas and fantasias) and creating music for the stage. Certainly his one true opera, Dido and Aeneas, is an enduring masterpiece, and the sensitivity with which he sets texts in his solo songs has been matched by few others.

Queen Mary II was a source of considerable inspiration for Purcell. In celebration of her name day, Purcell composed numerous anthems, odes and motets. Upon her death in 1694 (one year before Purcell’s own), he compiled the Funeral Music for the Death of Queen Mary, which includes choral settings of funeral sentences from the Book of Common Prayer, as well as instrumental canzonas and marches for brass and percussion. The simple and striking final anthem,

SINGER BIOS

ERIC ALATORRE is in his 28th and final season with Chanticleer. His legendary career singing bass with Chanticleer began in the last century, and he has sung with and mentored many new generations of singers. He has enjoyed performing all over the country and the world, with plenty of time to explore his other passion: food. A part-time hedonist and full-time wine enthusiast, he has shared many wonderful dining experiences with his fellow singers on the road during stops in 37 countries. Eric’s inimitable sound is heard on 40 of Chanticleer’s recordings. While he will miss his peripatetic life with Chanticleer, he looks forward to spending much more time with his wonderful wife Dorothee and his multi-lingual daughters Mia and Clara.

ZACHARY BURGESS, bass-baritone, is a native of Washington D.C. Recently he received First Prize in the Vocal Arts DC Art Song Discovery Competition, and as a result was invited to present solo recitals at the Phillips Collection and Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. Additionally, Mr. Burgess was invited to be featured in Brahms’ Ein Deutsches Requiem by the Alexandria Choral Society.

Previous engagements include three appearances with D.C. Public Opera, where he portrayed Guglielmo from Mozart’s Così fan tutte; Masetto from Mozart’s Don Giovanni; and was featured in recital at the Embassy of Austria featuring the works of Franz Schubert. He has performed as bass soloist in Haydn’s The Creation with the Alexandria Choral Society; J.S. Bach’s Magnificat in D-major with the Boston Conservatory Chorale; Handel’s Messiah with the Genesee Valley Orchestra and Chorus; Schumann’s Szenen aus Goethes Faust with the Eastman Rochester Chorus; Beethoven’s Missa Solemnis with the Eastman Rochester Chorus; J.S. Bach’s St. Matthew Passion with the Eastman Chorale.

While at Eastman School of Music he performed the roles of Frank Murrant in Street Scene, Zoroastro in Orlando, Collatinus in The Rape of Lucretia and Keçal in The Bartered Bride. He has also performed Sarastro in Die Zauberflöte at Opera del West and the title role in The Mikado and Crébillon in La Rondine at The Boston Conservatory.

Mr. Burgess is an alumnus of the CoOPERative Program, SongFest, Green Mountain Opera, as well as the Crescendo Summer Institute where his portrayal of Leporello in Mozart’s Don Giovanni was recorded and broadcast on regional Hungarian TV. Zachary holds his Bachelor of Music from the Boston Conservatory and his Master of Music from the Eastman School of Music. This is his first season with Chanticleer.

BRIAN HINMAN has been a part of Chanticleer for nearly twelve years as both Tenor and Road Manager. In addition to performing on six studio and ten live recordings since joining in 2006, Brian has been involved in the production end of Chanticleer Records. He has recorded, edited, and/or mixed a number of Chanticleer’s live recordings and most notably was Co-Producer on Chanticleer’s pop/jazz album Someone New with Leslie Ann Jones and former Chanticleer member Jace Wittig. Brian is also thrilled to have written several pop, gospel, and jazz arrangements for the group in recent years. No stranger to committees and conference rooms, Brian also serves as the Chair of the Advocacy Committee on the Board of Governors for the San Francisco Chapter of the Recording Academy, the organization that presents the GRAMMY® Awards. Before joining Chanticleer, Brian built a background in theater, studied Vocal Performance at the University of Tennessee and studied jazz and acting in New York City.

TIM KEELER, countertenor, is sought after as a performer, a conductor, and an educator. Prior to joining Chanticleer, he sang with the Grammy-nominated Choir of Trinity Wall Street and performed frequently throughout New York City with groups like TENET, Ekmeles, New York Polyphony, Gallicantus, Trident Ensemble, and the Saint Thomas Choir of Men and Boys.

While in New York, Tim directed the choirs at the Special Music School High School and served as a vocal coach and conductor for the Young People’s Chorus of New York City. He was also the choral conductor for Juilliard’s new Summer Performing Arts program - a two-week intensive summer course in Geneva, Switzerland.

nationwide. Looking back to its roots in early music and its 40 years of performing music written for the Missions of New Spain, Chanticleer offers Saints Alive in March and April in the Missions Santa Clara, San Francisco, San Jose and Sonoma. In June, Then and There, Here and Now will take a panoramic look back at Chanticleer's favorite composers and repertoires, along with a world premiere by Matthew Aucoin. A post season concert on June 27, 2018 in the Old Mission Dolores will commemorate the first San Francisco performance of Chanticleer, there, on that day 40 years earlier.

With the help of individual contributions, government, foundation and corporate support, Chanticleer's education programs engage over 5,000 young people annually. The Louis A. Botto (LAB) Choir—an after-school honors program for high school and college students—is now in its eighth year, adding to the ongoing program of in-school clinics and workshops; Youth Choral Festivals™ in the Bay Area and around the country; Skills/LAB—an intensive summer workshop for 50 high school students; master classes for university students nationwide. Chanticleer's education program was recognized with the 2010 Chorus America Education Outreach Award.

Since Chanticleer began releasing recordings in 1981, the group has sold well over a million albums and won two GRAMMY® awards. Chanticleer's recordings are distributed by Chanticleer Records, Naxos, ArkivMusic, Amazon, and iTunes among others, and are available on Chanticleer's website: www.chanticleer.org.

In 2014 Chorus America conferred the inaugural Brazeal Wayne Dennard Award on Chanticleer's Music Director Emeritus Joseph H. Jennings to acknowledge his contribution to the African-American choral tradition during his 25-year (1983-2009) tenure as a singer and music director with Chanticleer. The hundred plus arrangements of African-American gospel, spirituals and jazz made by Jennings for Chanticleer have been given thousands of performances worldwide—live and on broadcast—and have been recorded by Chanticleer for Warner Classics and Chanticleer Records.

Chanticleer's long-standing commitment to commissioning and performing new works was honored in 2008 by the inaugural Dale Warland/Chorus America Commissioning Award and the ASCAP/Chorus America Award for Adventurous Programming. Among the over eighty composers commissioned in Chanticleer's history are Mark Adamo, Matthew Aucoin, Mason Bates, Régis Campo, Chen Yi, David Conte, Shawn Crouch, Douglas J. Cuomo, Brent Michael Davids, Anthony Davis, Gabriela Lena Frank, Guido López-Gavilán, Stacy Garrop, William Hawley, John Harbison, Jake Heggie, Jackson Hill, Kamran Ince, Jeeyoung Kim, Tania León, Jaakko Mäntyjärvi, Michael McGlynn, Peter Michaelides, Nico Muhly, John Musto, Tarik O'Regan, Roxanna Panufnik, Stephen Paulus, Shulamit Ran, Bernard Rands, Steven Sametz, Carlos Sanchez-Gutierrez, Jan Sandström, Paul Schoenfield, Steven Stucky, John Tavener, Augusta Read Thomas and Janike Vandervelde.

Named for the “clear-singing” rooster in Geoffrey Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, Chanticleer was founded in 1978 by tenor Louis A. Botto, who sang in the Ensemble until 1989 and served as Artistic Director until his death in 1997. Chanticleer became known first for its interpretations of Renaissance music, and was later a pioneer in the revival of the South American baroque, recording several award winning titles in that repertoire. Chanticleer was named Ensemble of the Year by Musical America in 2008, and inducted in the American Classical Music Hall of Fame the same year. William Fred Scott was named Music Director in 2014. A native of Georgia, Scott is the former Assistant Conductor to Robert Shaw at the Atlanta Symphony, former Artistic Director of the Atlanta Opera, an organist and choir director.

Chanticleer—a 501(c)(3) non-profit corporation—is the recipient of major grants from the Ann and Gordon Getty Foundation, The William & Flora Hewlett Foundation, The Dunard Fund/USA, The Mid Atlantic Arts Foundation through USArtists International in partnership with the National Endowment for the Arts and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, The Bernard Osher Foundation, the Osher Pro Suecia Foundation, The Bob Ross Foundation, Grants for the Arts/San Francisco Hotel Tax Fund, and The National Endowment for the Arts. Chanticleer's activities as a not-for-profit corporation are supported by its administrative staff and Board of Trustees.

“Thou Knowest, Lord,” is homophonic, set in a hymn-like fashion with all four vocal lines moving together. Devoid of any sort of ornamentation or vocal display, the short motet uses word repetitions (albeit few), vocal interjections and chromaticism to intensify the pleas of the congregation.

Thou knowest, Lord, the secrets of our hearts;
Shut not thy merciful ears unto our prayer;
But spare us, Lord most holy, O God most mighty.
O holy and most merciful Saviour,
Thou most worthy Judge eternal,
Suffer us not at our last hour,
For any pains of death to fall away from Thee.

Civitas sancti tui – Byrd

William Byrd, called the “Father of Musicke” by his contemporaries, is frequently cited as the most important composer of Elizabethan England. Byrd's influence over all aspects of Renaissance composition cannot be overstated: he not only changed the face of church music, but he also resurrected the English song and virtually created the verse anthem. No fewer than seven books of psalm settings and religious motets exist and his Mass settings for three, four and five voices have never lost their popularity in the almost five centuries since their composition. This particular motet, “Civitas sancti tui,” is one of three “Jerusalem” motets by Byrd and is often performed as a companion piece to the one which begins “Ne irascaris Domine,” (“Do not be angry with us oh Lord.”) These reflections, which comment on that period of the Israelites' history known as the Babylonian Captivity, are of a similar hue to the words of Psalm 137, “By the waters of Babylon, there we sat down and wept when we remember you, oh Jerusalem.” Byrd's understanding of the exiled community of holiness takes on particular significance as we imagine his own feelings of alienation as a Roman Catholic in increasingly Protestant, sixteenth-century England. There is pain, weeping and sadness, to be sure, but also a sturdy cry for unity that continues to make itself heard. Simplicity and sophistication are combined in a way that is typical of this great master.

Civitas sancti tui facta est deserta,	Your Holy City has become a desert,
Sion facta deserta est.	Zion has become a desert.
Jerusalem desolata est.	Jerusalem has been made desolate.

O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem - Thomas Tomkins (1572 - 1656)

Welsh-born Thomas Tomkins was the last of the school of English composers in the mold of Byrd. His position in music history is rather confusing: conservative in nature but prolific in output, some praise him as a genius, while others curse him as archaic. His style obviously pleased him and, although he might have smarted when his title as Composer of the King's Music “in ordinary” was revoked, never the less he continued to compose Anglican music of great sophistication and mastery. In fact, to this day, the music of Tomkins has never been out of fashion in church circles. It continues to intrigue and delight listeners and frequently calls for enormous technical control on the part of the singers.

“O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem” is a perfect example of the type of Tudor polyphony Tomkins preferred. Devoid of angular rhythms, chromatic cross-relations or dense polyphony, the entire anthem is more plaintive than insistent. The opening lyric motive, although only two measures in its entirety, is repeated over and over again in every voice, giving the impression of a multitude of supplicants sending their prayers to God. If Byrd's “Civitas sancti” is a sturdy cry for unity in an outburst of sadness over the fallen Jerusalem, then Tomkins' short motet may serve as its gentle counterpart: a quiet reflection of hope and serenity.

O pray for the peace of Jerusalem.
They shall prosper that love thee.

We be Souldiers Three - Thomas Ravenscroft (c. 1582 – c. 1633)

Although he was highly regarded by his contemporaries, Thomas Ravenscroft's place in the musical hierarchy of Tudor times is secured not by his sophisticated polyphonic madrigals, motets or canticles, but for his collection of rounds, drinking songs and "catches" (including "Three Blind Mice!") It is to Ravenscroft that we turn when we want to imagine what so-called popular songs might have sounded like in late sixteenth-century England. "We be Souldiers Three" is one such song. Sung in a rollicking triple meter, it's easy to imagine a tavern full of drunken soldiers clinking their mugs of ale together in praise of libation and brotherhood.

*We be souldiers three
Pardona moy, je vous an pree,
Lately come forth of the low country
With never a penny of money.*

*Here, good fellow, I drink to thee
Pardona moy, je vous an pree,
To all good fellows wherever they be,
With never a penny of money.*

*And he that will not grant me this,
Pardona moy, je vous an pree,
Pays for the shot what ever it is,

La guerre - Clément Janequin (c. 1485 - 1558)

Unlike most composers of his generation, Clément Janequin never held an important position with any one church or cathedral. Instead, he held a series of minor, seldom lucrative, positions; only late in his life did he achieve an official appointment at the royal court. The bulk of his compositional output lies in the realm of popular chansons instead of in liturgical motets or settings of the Mass. His widespread fame was probably a result of concurrent developments in music printing: over 250 of his popular songs were published in his lifetime. Few composers of the Renaissance were more popular in their lifetimes than Janequin. Even so, Janequin always struggled with money and died in poverty.

Two of Janequin's most beloved works are what might be called sound-effect pieces. Of those two, the most popular is "La guerre: Escoutez tous gentils," also known as "Le bataille de Marignan" and, sometimes in English, "The French Skirmish." Based on the French victory over the Swiss Confederates at the Battle of Marignano in 1515, La guerre is filled with onomatopoeic effects, such as clashing swords, shouting comrades, whizzing arrows and the like, which give the listener the sensation that the battle is actually taking place. This sort of music-making was wildly exciting to audiences of the period and even great instrumental composers, such as the Austrian Heinrich Ignatz Biber, composed works where either vocal or orchestral sound-effects were employed to create a theatrical sense of "you are there" excitement.

Janequin's musical language is essentially simple. Harmonically, the music is quite static, in fact, and the success of the work depends largely upon these short mosaics of sound, which are often layered to create the cacophony of war-like noises. Contained within, however, are several lyrical moments: the arrival of King Francis the First is one to a country where a winged sentry stands guard -- the winged sentry that awaits us is Peace, herself. The lines of battle, the soldier in ranks and files, are no longer commanded by military men but by one, "born in a manger." All are invited to draw near to the flower of Peace, a "rose which never withers."

Musically, the work juxtaposes stately, prophetic homophony against lilting dance-like sections which foreshadow the serenity of the beyond. The most active section also underlines (with the greatest amount of polyphony) the text, "One who never changes," culminating with the words, "Thy God, thy Life, thy Cure." The same rising phrases which opened the work serve as its close, ending not quietly but with renewed strength and confidence.

My soul, there is a country
Far beyond the stars,
Where stands a winged sentry
All skilful in the wars:

There, above noise and danger
Sweet Peace sits crowned with smiles
And One, born in a manger
Commands the beauteous files.

He is thy gracious friend
And, O my soul, awake!
Did in pure love descend
To die here for thy sake.

If thou canst get but thither,
There grows the flow'r of Peace,
The Rose that cannot wither,
Thy fortress and thy ease.

Leave then thy foolish ranges,
For none can thee secure
But One who never changes,
Thy God, thy Life, thy Cure.

ABOUT CHANTICLEER

Called "the world's reigning male chorus" by the New Yorker, the San Francisco based GRAMMY® award-winning ensemble Chanticleer will celebrate its 40th anniversary in 2018. During its 2017-18 season, Chanticleer will perform 52 concerts in 23 of the United States, 27 in the San Francisco Bay Area, and 8 in Poland, Germany, France and Spain. Praised by the San Francisco Chronicle for its "tonal luxuriance and crisply etched clarity," Chanticleer is known around the world as "an orchestra of voices" for its seamless blend of twelve male voices ranging from soprano to bass and its original interpretations of vocal literature, from Renaissance to jazz and popular genres, as well as contemporary composition.

Chanticleer's 2017-18 season is the third under the direction of Music Director William Fred Scott. Heart of a Soldier features new compositions by Mason Bates and John Musto in a program about the art of soldiering, the pageant of war, the absurdity of battle, the loves left behind and the hope of peace. Included are new arrangements by ensemble members Brian Hinman and Adam Ward. Chanticleer's popular A Chanticleer Christmas will be heard this year in Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois and Indiana before coming home for 13 performances in the Bay Area and Southern California. A Chanticleer Christmas is broadcast annually on over 300 affiliated public radio stations

My Soul, There is a Country - Charles Hubert Hastings Parry (1848 - 1918)

Many music critics, historians, singers and instrumentalists have been heard to say that Benjamin Britten was the “greatest English composer since Purcell.” Their haste to praise Britten, unfortunately, seems to bypass the amazing composer and teacher of the Victorian Age, Charles Hubert Hastings Parry. To be sure, Parry’s influence on the music of Victorian England cannot be understated. Although his early professional life was spent as an underwriter for Lloyd’s of London, his aspirations for a musical career saw their initial fruition through George Grove, who engaged Parry as sub-editor for his new Dictionary of Music and Musicians, a massive enterprise for which Parry contributed over 100 articles. Through the influence of Grove, Parry was also appointed Professor of Composition and Musical History at the newly-formed Royal College of Music, concurrent with a similar position at Oxford. As a young composer Parry was greatly influenced by Mendelssohn, Brahms and Wagner; such was the influence of Wagner, in fact, that Parry traveled several times to Germany to hear the latest Wagner’s pen. In spite of his desire to become an opera composer, Parry found himself in demand for the typically English musical product of the day, the oratorio. With the success of “Blest Pair of Sirens,” which he labeled a “musical ode,” he established himself as an unrivaled master of that field. By the 1890s, he was regarded as the unofficial composer laureate of great Britain, composing a setting of the Magnificat for Queen Victoria’s Diamond Jubilee, gaining a Knighthood in 1898, as well as being named Baronet in 1902.

The Songs of Farewell, which are among the last of Parry’s compositions, is a collection of motets on texts by various British poets. They represent the summit of British a cappella music, with supremely eloquent vocal lines, total mastery of counterpoint and glowing, almost hallowed colors and textures. The themes of the poetry contrast the transitory nature of life with the redeeming power of faith. Parry was moved to compose these motets (there are six in all) during the First World War as he was particularly struck by the constant horrible reports from “the front.” According to Parry’s biographer, Jeremy Dibbell, the aging composer experienced “an incredulity, combined with a profound sense of betrayal, that a nation of artistic heroes who had taught him everything... could be capable of such carnage.”

The first of the motets, “My Soul, There is a Country,” is probably the best-known of the collection. It is also one of the shorter ones. Composed for four voices, it speaks convincingly and without flowery oratory. Based on the visionary text of Henry Vaughan (1621-1695) the motet is a home-coming and a benediction, so to speak. Vaughan directs the reader such. The troops, amassed for battle, pause for just a few measures to welcome “La fleur de lys, fleur de hault pris, le roy François.” The listener can imagine the king, perhaps on a noble steed, climbing up the hill, finally appearing, and bestowing a benediction on the troops before commencing the battle.

As if the four-part vocal texture weren’t busy enough, Janequin’s fellow countryman Philippe Verdelot composed a fifth line of music, more florid and contrapuntal, to accompany the second printing of the work. This type of “compositional supplementation” was not at all uncommon.

Lamentatio sanctae matris ecclesiae constantinopolitanae

Lament of the Holy Mother Church of Constantinople

Guillaume Dufay (c. 1397 - 1474)

The French-born and Italian-trained composer Guillaume Dufay was acknowledged as the leading musical figure in the mid-15th century, with far-reaching influence among his contemporaries. The tradition (doubted by some scholars) regarding his Lamentatio sanctae matris ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae holds that it was performed at an extravagant banquet given in 1454 by the Duke of Burgundy, Philip the Good. The Duke hoped to arouse his fellow European nobles into crusading zeal for the recapture of the city of Constantinople from the Turks, to whom it had fallen the previous year.

As in many motets of this period, the rapid-moving upper parts are in French, while the slower-paced tenor part uses a Latin text from the Lamentations of Jeremiah to decry the abandonment of Constantinople to the infidel. In typical cantus firmus fashion (using a borrowed melody in slow notes as a melodic foundation for a motet), the tenor part employs a version of the liturgical melody used for chanting the Lamentations during Holy Week.

O tres piteulx de tout espoir fontaine, Pere du filz dont suis mere explorée, Plaindre me viens a ta court souveraine, De ta puissance et de nature humaine, Qui ont souffert telle durté villaine Faire a mon filz, qui tant m'a hounourée.	Source of all hope, most merciful father of my son, I, his sorrowful mother, Come before your mighty court to indict both your power And mankind for allowing my son, Who was such a credit to me, To suffer such dire pain.

Dont suis de bien et de joye separée, Sans qui vivant veulle entendre mes plains. A toy, seul Dieu, du forfait me complains, Du gref tourment et douloureux oultrage, Que voy souffrir au plus bel des humains Sans nul confort de tout humain lignage.	For this reason I am sick at heart and full of care. Yet none will listen to my pleas. So I bring to you, one and only God, my complaint Of the grievous suffering and pain That the finest man that ever was Endures without a shred of human comfort.

Where have all the graveyards gone, long time ago?
Where have all the graveyards gone?
Gone to flowers, everyone.
Oh, when will they ever learn?
Oh, when will they ever learn?

Where have all the flowers gone, long time passing?
Where have all the flowers gone, long time ago?
Where have all the flowers gone?
Young girls have picked them everyone.
Oh, when will they ever learn?
Oh, when will they ever learn?

“...a silence that speaks” - John Musto (b. 1954)

The works of the American poet Archibald MacLeish had long appealed to composer John Musto. It was a pleasant surprise that, when the possibility of setting “The Young Dead Soldiers Do Not Speak” for Chanticleer came up, Musto agreed immediately and without reservation. The intensity of the short poem has found a moving and even haunting place in Musto’s personal and persuasive language. To MacLeish’s text, the composer has added several Latin epigrams which serve as moments of reflection, sometimes surprisingly relentless, occasionally angular and jagged with pain, finally ominous and eerie.

A solo baritone voice begins the work; immediately voices, as if from another world, chime in, reminding the listener that the dead soldiers do in fact continue to move us. Musto’s musical language may be quite different from that which Jennifer Higdon uses in her choruses from Cold Mountain, but the over-arching questions are the same, “Are we buried and simply forgotten? Will you remember us? Did any peace result from our fighting?” In Musto’s hands, fugue and counterpoint, canon and imitation combine with elastic and augmented intervals as the silence becomes audible. Often three or four musical ideas are heard at the same time. There is a kind of rhythmic energy that goes back and forth from simple, repetitive ostinato to the combination of eight-notes, triplets and quarter-notes which force the listener into the heart of the poetry.

Musto is a native of Brooklyn, New York and an alumnus of the Manhattan School of Music. He was a finalist for the Pulitzer Prize, winner of two Emmy awards, two CINE awards, recipient of a Rockefeller Fellowship, and most recently commissioned by Chanticleer for a setting of the Stephen Foster song, “Must the Red Rose Live Alway?,” heard in last year’s My Secret Heart program. In addition to his work as a composer of nearly every genre, he is a highly respected pianist whose two piano concertos were hailed by Gramophone magazine as “works of enormous imagination, freshness and feeling that require a soloist who combines sensitivity with almost ferocious virtuosity.” The textures of Musto’s setting of MacLeish are not necessarily ferocious, but they are certainly intense. The music almost never comes to rest, harmonically speaking, and so the very ending, as the words “Remember us” are repeated over and over, is even more special. A lone D-major chord imbeds itself in our hearing. We are left with a charge: “we leave you our deaths: give them their meaning.”

The young dead soldiers do not speak
Nevertheless they are heard in the still houses: who has not heard them?

Pulvis et umbra sumus. [We are dust and shadow. – Horace]

They have a silence that speaks for them at night and when the clock counts.
They say, We were young. We have died. Remember us.

I had been reading a long novel -- “And Quiet Flows the Don” -- about the Don River in Russia and the Cossacks who lived along it in the 19th century. It describes the Cossack soldiers galloping off to join the Czar’s army, singing as they go. Three lines from a song are quoted in the book: “Where are the flowers? The girls plucked them/Where are the girls? They’re all married/Where are the men? They’re all in the army.”

Later, in an airplane, I was dozing, and it occurred to me that the line “long time passing” -- which I had also written in a notebook -- would sing well. Then I thought, “When will we ever learn?” Suddenly, within twenty minutes, I had a song. There were just three verses. I Scotch-taped the song to a microphone and sang it at Oberlin College. This was in 1955.

One of the students there had a summer job as a camp counselor. (Joe Hickerson is his name, and I gave him twenty percent of the royalties.) He took the song to the camp and sang it to the kids. He gave it rhythm, which I hadn’t done. The kids played around with it, singing “Where have all the counselor gone? Open curfew, everyone!”

[Hickerson] actually added two verses: “Where have all the soldiers gone? Gone to graveyards every one/Where have all the graveyards gone? Covered with flowers every one.”

In this arrangement it is Ward’s hope that the listener not only be transported back to the Vietnam War era, but, as he says, “to realize that this song holds as much truth now as it did upon its release in 1964.”

Where have all the flowers gone, long time passing?
Where have all the flowers gone, long time ago?
Where have all the flowers gone?
Young girls have picked them everyone.
Oh, when will they ever learn?
Oh, when will they ever learn?

Where have all the young girls gone, long time passing?
Where have all the young girls gone, long time ago?
Where have all the young girls gone?
Gone for husbands everyone.
Oh, when will they ever learn?
Oh, when will they ever learn?

Where have all the husbands gone, long time passing?
Where have all the husbands gone, long time ago?
Where have all the husbands gone?
Gone for soldiers everyone.
Oh, when will they ever learn?
Oh, when will they ever learn?

Where have all the soldiers gone, long time passing?
Where have all the soldiers gone, long time ago?
Where have all the soldiers gone?
Gone to graveyards, everyone.
Oh, when will they ever learn?
Oh, when will they ever learn?

Where have all the graveyards gone, long time passing?

L’homme armé - Trad. Troubadour Song

It is hard to think of any other melody in the history of music that has yielded so much music of the highest quality as this simple twenty-bar “troubadour” song. The origin of “L’homme armé” is unknown, but at a time in history when the Ottoman Turks were threatening to ravage Europe (the fall of Constantinople had taken place in 1453) a rallying fight song such as this could easily have become popular. Surely no wandering minstrel could ever have imagined the influence which this song has made. Used as the starting point for more than 40 settings of the Roman Catholic Mass during the 15th and 16th centuries, nearly every reputable composer of the time has a Missa L’homme armé to his name, including Dufay, Machaut, Busnois and Ockeghem, just to name a few Franco-Flemish composers. The last section of the Kyrie from Ockeghem’s setting is an excellent example of how composers would have used this secular tune in a sacred setting. As quiet counterpoint fills the page, the melody of L’homme armé stands out in the tenor voice. In our programmatic context, Ockeghem’s cry, “Lord, have mercy” is particularly moving. If our first (or only) response is fighting, then might not we look for help? For another way out? Lord, have mercy, indeed.

L’homme, l’homme, l’homme armé, l’homme armé, L’homme armé doibt on doubter.	Oh, the man, the man at arms, Fills the folk with dread alarms.
On a fait par tout crier, Que chascun se viegne armer, d’un haubregon de fer.	Everywhere I hear them wail, “Find, if you would breast the gale, A good, stout coat of mail.”
L’homme, l’homme, l’homme armé, l’homme armé, L’homme armé doibt on doubter.	Oh, the man, the man at arms, Fills the folk with dread alarms.

La bataglia ‘taliana - Matthias Hermann Werrecore (c. 1500 – c. 1574)

Little is known about Matthias Werrecore. Although of Flemish lineage, his name appears in conjunction with the Milan Cathedral. It is probable that as a young man he was enlisted to fight with Duke Francesco Sforza in the Italian Wars of 1521-1526. His most famous composition, “La bataglia ‘taliana,” celebrates Sforza and his contribution to the major defeat of the French at the Battle of Pavia in 1525. (Some scholars insist that the “skirmish” which Werrecore portrays was actually the Battle of Micozza in 1522, which ensured Milan’s independence.) The original preface of the piece does not help us very much. It simply says, “Matthias Herman Verconrensis, who himself in the line of battle witnessed the worst of miseries, composed in this way.” Records show that he became the Maestro di Cappella at the Duomo in Milan, a post he would hold for nearly thirty years. Again, a strange contradiction comes up: records also show that he wasn’t very well suited for this post, in spite of holding it for three decades. Numerous complaints arose about the poor performance and behavior of his choirs!

Werrecore likely knew of Janequin’s “La guerre,” since “La bataglia ‘taliana” is composed in virtually the same manner. The musical material is simple; it is the sound-effects of battle, the misused and badly pronounced foreign dialects, the self-proclaimed glory of fighting, that create and sustain interest in both compositions. (In fact, Werrecore’s piece was frequently called “The Italian Skirmish” in order to distinguish it from Janequin’s better-known work.) Werrecore’s Italian version describes happenings on the battlefield over the span of three days. The work opens with fanfares in honor of the Duke, and launches almost immediately into the scene of the battle. Texts and musical images portray the sounding of alarms, the clashing of swords as well as the firing of the arquebus, the first “triggered” weapon to be used in battle. While not as inventive as Janequin, Werrecore uses many of the same ostinato patterns to create the soundscape of battle. What Werrecore’s battle scene lacks musically, however, is more than made up for by the acerbic text he sets. Although equally pompous as the French about their own military prowess, the Italians have no qualms about hurling insults and ridicule upon friends and foes alike. Certainly the French receive their fair share of insults (referred to as lazy wine-guzzlers and stinky dogs) but it seems that the Swiss, fighting for the French, receive the brunt of the ridicule, as Werrecore depicts them as mere yodeling ninnies, happier to dance a minuet than to fight. In fact, in the middle of the second day of battle (called “Secunda Pars” in the score) the fighting seems to stop: four quite identifiable musical pictures are created. The Swiss girls are dancing a minuet. The Italians are calling for the Duke to come lead them. The mercenary Germans, hired as mercenary soldiers, are randomly firing off heavy weaponry as the French are babbling nonsense syllables. The little vignette only comes to a halt as one soprano seems to faint dead away. Perhaps the dancing was too much for her?

Ultimately, at the end of the third day, the cowards — whoever they are — run away and the Duke proclaims victory. “Vittoria, vittoria!” is heard passing from voice to voice as the magnificence of the last strain “Viva il Duca di Milano” is heard in the altos and basses.

The Italian Skirmish

or: “The defeat of François I, King of France, at the Battle of Pavia, 1525.”

(This truly theatrical translation of the long text Werrecore uses describes some of the narrative of the long battle. It has a decidedly Italian slant -- some sources say Werrecore actually participated in the skirmish -- and is filled with onomatopoeic sounds of battle, of crowds coming together, silly low-class doggerel and an occasional slur towards the French foe.)

He was a famous trumpet man from out Chicago way
 He had a boogie style that no one else could play
 He was the top man at his craft
 But then his number came up and he was gone with the draft
 He’s in the army now, a-blowin’ reveille
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B

They made him blow a bugle for his Uncle Sam
 It really brought him down because he couldn’t jam
 The captain seemed to understand
 Because the next day the cap’ went out and drafted a band
 And now the comp’ny jumps when he plays reveille
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B

A-toot, a-toot, a-toot-diddelyada-toot
 He blows it eight-to-the-bar, in boogie rhythm
 He can’t blow a note unless the bass and guitar is playin’ with ‘I’m
 He makes the comp’ny jump when he plays reveille
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B
 He was our boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B

And when he plays boogie woogie bugle he was busy as a “bzzz” bee
 And when he plays he makes the comp’ny jump eight-to-the-bar
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B

Toot-toot-toot, toot-diddelyada, toot-diddelyada
 Toot, toot, he blows it eight-to-the-bar
 He can’t blow a note if the bass and guitar isn’t with him
 A-a-a-and the comp’ny jumps when he plays reveille
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B

He puts the boys asleep with boogie every night
 And wakes ‘em up the same way in the early bright
 They clap their hands and stamp their feet
 Because they know how he plays when someone gives him a beat
 He really breaks it up when he plays reveille
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B

And the comp’ny jumps when he plays reveille
 He’s the boogie woogie bugle boy of Company B!

Where Have All the Flowers Gone? - Pete Seeger (1919 - 2014), arr. Adam Ward

Adam Ward and Brian Hinman have frequently graced the programs of Chanticleer with new arrangements of songs we love. Along with countertenor Alan Reinhardt, this year marks their twelfth anniversary with the ensemble. When asked for program notes about his arrangement of “Where Have All the Flowers Gone?,” Ward turned quickly to words from the song’s creator, Pete Seeger.

I was really on my way, but I had to stop and say:

Comment allez-vous?
 (Comment allez-vous, petit chou?)
 Say it, it has 'savoir faire'
 (Comment allez-vous mon minou?)
 Has a continental air

Cloaks and suitors, by the oodles, say it to their cute french poodles
 Spaniards say it, so do Greeks
 (Comment allez-vous?)
 In the desert, so do Sheiks
 (show they know a thing or two)
 (it's so easy, why can't you say...?)
 Comment allez-vous?

My Buddy - Walter Donaldson (1893 - 1947), arr. Vince Peterson

Topping the charts at #1 in 1922, "My Buddy" was one of the most popular tunes of the 1920s. Written by the legendary duo of Walter Donaldson and Gus Kahn, it became a favorite of soldiers during wartime, reminding them of loved ones back home. Over the years many artists have recorded "My Buddy," including Frank Sinatra and Bing Crosby, Connie Francis and Doris Day. Barbra Streisand introduced it to a new generation of listeners when it appeared on her album, "The Way We Were." Though it might have a sentimental patina to it that might locate it as particularly American and of a certain between-the-wars era, the song addresses the incredible personal struggles of separation and loneliness that all soldiers and their loved ones must feel.

Nights are long since you went away
 I think about you all through the day
 My buddy, my buddy
 Nobody quite so true...

Miss your voice, the touch of your hand
 Just long to know that you understand
 My buddy, my buddy
 Your buddy misses you.

Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy - Hughie Prince & Don Raye, arr. Brian Hinman

Boogie Woogie originated in and around Texas as a subset of the blues, played on the piano and inspired by the driving rhythms of the railroad that was spreading across the state in the late 1800s. Increased access to audio recording through the 1920s helped introduce the style to wider audiences, and by the late-1930s the enormously popular dance and "swing" bands had fully ushered it into a large-scale revival. Enter: The Andrews Sisters, who exploded onto the scene in 1937 with their recording of an English version of a Yiddish song called "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen." Four years later, the iconic "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy" became the Sisters' best-known song. Characterized by the driving and relentless bass rhythms, this dance style wanted a nearly constant flow of eight eighth-notes to every bar. This arrangement is meant to capture that infectious, full, big-band energy, that made the revival of Boogie Woogie such a thrill.

Seconda parte

(The French troops are given a few sentences by Werrecore. As the fighting continues, young ladies -- canteen bearers, perhaps -- and teenage boys are heard in prayer to the Virgin Mary, while the "fighting French" try desperately to rouse the troops in a shout of unity.)

El gran Duca Milanese Guard' il ponte Con la sua gente lombarda E gran Duca milanese Sta ben forte alle contese Contra si gross'antiguardia D'assai compagnia francese Dobbe dobbe dobbe Duca! Italia! The great Duke of Milan Keeps a watchful eye on the bridge. With his Lombard men The great Duke of Milan Has a strong chance of winning Against the slovenly rear guard of the French forces. Dobbe, dobbe, dobbe , Duke! Oh Italy! "Companions one and all Strike them down, strike for France, Kill these villains, march on for France." Fa ri ra ri ron Raise your muskets! Raise your arquebuses! Tif tof tif tof, ture lure lof How confused are the men of Le Roi François. No longer will they wield their pikes Shoulder to shoulder the scoundrels are marching "O, Notre Dame! O, blessed Jesu! Surely we are lost." They are poltroons, they are lazy wine-guzzlers These men who have sat around all day Into the pepper pot, you miserable Frenchies.

Terza parte

(The Spanish and the Germans helped the Italians rout the French and the few Swiss troops who were helping them. Werrecore adds nonsensical German and Spanish phrases into the generally Italian hymn of praise. Werrecore's German, French and Spanish additions are full of out-of-date or incorrect words, bad grammar and substandard phrases. This mocking use of foreign languages was typical of composers writing in this 'macaronic' style. The famous motet, Matona mia cara, of Lassus, is peppered with bad German pronunciation of Italian words, for instance, as it attempts to mock the poor German cavalryman who so unsuccessfully tries to seduce the lovely maiden.)

O Signori Italiani Su ogn'alemano a voi Vien la furia amara D'ogni Sguizaro villano Scoppettier su spara Non scargate colp'invano Dobbe dobbe dobbe Tif tof tif tof Fa ri ra ri ron Italia! Duca! Viva ‘l Duca de Milano.	Long live the Duke of Milan!

Battle of Borodino - Trad. Russian Soldier Song, arr. Vladimir Mantulin

In his exile on the island of St. Helen’s, Napoleon wrote in a letter to his confidant “It is two things that ruined us in Russia: the bitter winter and their loud soldier songs.” The Battle of Borodino was one of the largest and bloodiest battles of modern history, next to the battles of Stalingrad and Britain, Trafalgar and Gettysburg. Mikhail Lermontov’s poem “Borodino” was published in 1837 on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the battle.

Lermontov (1814-1841) is considered a supreme poet of the Russian literature, alongside Pushkin, and the greatest figure of Russian Romanticism. Immensely prolific and versatile as a poet, writer, and painter, Lermontov is often called “the poet of the Caucasus” and “the Russian Byron.” A career officer (as all men of noble descent were at the time), Lermontov served in the Russian Imperial Army and took part in several wars in Persia and Turkey: campaigns that were aimed to take control over the Caucasus. He was killed in a duel at the age of twenty-six, in the mountains near the town of Pyatigorsk. Lermontov’s poem “Borodino” is known and loved by every Russian.

In June 1812, Napoleon led his army into Russia. He expected a short war and Napoleon took around 600,000 men but brought few supplies. Napoleon planned to confront the Russian army in a major battle, the kind of battle he usually won. Tsar Alexander I knew this, however, and adopted a clever strategy: instead of facing Napoleon’s forces head on, the Russians simply kept retreating every time Napoleon’s forces tried to attack. Enraged, Napoleon would follow the retreating Russians again and again, marching his army deeper into Russia for three long months. Thus the campaign dragged on much longer than Napoleon expected. Furthermore, he had brought few supplies, since he expected his army to be able to live off of the land they were in, as was his usual practice. The desperate Russians, however, adopted a “scorched-earth” policy: whenever they retreated, they burned the places they left behind. Napoleon’s army only engaged the Russians in one major conflict, the Battle of Borodino, a small town seventy miles west of Moscow. The battle that followed was the largest and bloodiest single-day action of the Napoleonic Wars, involving more than 250,000 soldiers and resulting in 70,000 casualties. The French gained a victory, but at the cost of 49 general officers and thousands of men. The Russian army was able to extricate itself and withdrew the following day, leaving the French without the decisive victory Napoleon sought.

On September 14, 1812, Napoleon entered Moscow, which was now abandoned, on fire, and in ruins in conformity with the scorched-earth tactics. With a particularly harsh winter quickly setting in, Napoleon ordered his forces to retrace their path back to France. Yet winter now proved the cruelest foe for what was an underfed, ragged army. Of the roughly 600,000 troops who followed Napoleon into Russia, fewer than 100,000 made it back to Europe. This was the first of a series of defeats of the Napoleon army, followed by the battle of Leipzig and the final fall in the battle of Waterloo in 1815.

Скажи-ка, дядя, ведь не даром	Old timer, tell us how it happened
Москва, спаленная пожаром,	That Moscow, by great fires blackened
Французу отдана?	Was yielded to the foe?

What will echo from our song?
What has changed from this land of toil and pain?
What will grow from this scarlet soil?

We are soldiers, songs, civilians; we flow,
The unnamed tributaries of our nation’s blood,
The rivers of our nation’s blood.

Buried and forgotten, in our beautiful country,
Where we lie buried,
We rest beneath every step you take,
In the dust, in the ground on which you tread.

Hear the echo, the echo of our song,
And feel the shadow from our pain and toil,
Across the valleys spread in scarlet soil,
Our elegies echo loudly..

Hear the brittle snap of twigs,
Encased in Winter’s blackest bark.
The plumb line of our soul’s been cracked,
As one by one the stars go dark,
In our beautiful country.

Comment allez-vous? - Murray Grand (1919 - 2007), arr. Evan Price

Some performers can be characterized by a single adjective. Caruso might have been called heroic, a violinist like Heifetz, “astonishing.” Houdini might have been mesmerizing and William Jennings Bryan spell-binding. In the world of 1950s jazz, Blossom Dearie — an American-born composer, pianist and singer making her way in Paris — was, to put it simply, adorable.

Born in New York in the twenties, singing in Paris during the fifties, and recording for the famous Verve label, Blossom Dearie was instantly recognizable for her delicate piano filigree, graceful vocal mastery and her winning stage presence. She never raised her voice: one simply came to her. When she asks, “Comment allez-vous?” or, more provocatively, “Parlez-vous français?” her slightly sassy style really says, “Come on in. I’ve got a few things to say...” At once we’re transported into her world.

Parlez-vous Français?
Mais oui, allons-y!
(Après vous, chère madame!)

Comment allez-vous? Fancy bumping into you
Comment allez-vous? Tell me everything that’s new
Are you happy are you sad?
Feeling good or feeling bad?
(and is there anything you’re craving?)
(do you feel like misbehaving?)
Comment allez-vous? Gee, it’s nice to see you here
Comment allez-vous? You look better every year

Above all, lo, the sky so calm, so transparent after the rain, and with wondrous clouds;
Below too, all calm, all vital and beautiful—and the farm prospers well.

Down in the fields all prospers well;
But now from the fields come father—come at the daughter's call,
And come to the entry mother—to the front door come right away.

Fast as she can she hurries—something ominous, her steps trembling,
She does not tarry to smooth her hair nor adjust her cap.

Open the envelope quickly,
O this is not our son's writing, yet his name is signed;
A strange hand writes for our dear son—O stricken mother's soul!
All swims before her eyes, flashes with black, she catches the main words only,
Sentences broken—gunshot wound in the breast, cavalry skirmish, taken to hospital,
At present low, but will soon be better.

Ah now the single figure to me,
Amid all teeming and wealthy Ohio with its cities and farms,
Sickly white in the face and dull in the head,
By the jamb of a door leans.

Grieve not so, dear mother, (the just-grown daughter speaks through her sobs)
See, dearest mother, the letter says Pete will soon be better.

Alas poor boy, he will never be better,
While they stand at home at the door he is dead already,
The only son is dead.

But the mother needs to be better,
She with thin form dressed in black,
By day her meals untouched—then at night fitfully sleeping, often waking,
In the midnight waking, weeping, longing,
That she might withdraw unnoticed—silent from life escape and withdraw,
To follow, to seek, to be with her dear, dead son.

Our Beautiful Country - Jennifer Higdon (b. 1962)

One of America's most respected living composers is Brooklyn-born Jennifer Higdon. Winner of numerous honors – not the least of which is the Pulitzer Prize -- she currently holds the Milton L. Rock Chair of Composition studies at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. Dr. Higdon is the creator, along with librettist Gene Sheer, of the operatic version of Cold Mountain which was received with widespread acclaim at its premiere in Santa Fe in the summer of 2015. Particular attention was given to the choral writing in that poignant work. The San Francisco Classical Voice remarked, "It is a score which, in its sure-handed clarity, accessibility and inventiveness, marks Higdon as a natural creator for the lyric stage." This short chorus, "Our Beautiful Country," is lyrical and heartfelt, introspective but not tame. Reverence and passion mix as heroism is tinged with questioning. The musical textures are rich and deep, as the choral writing is defined by the tenor and bass voices of the ensemble.

Buried and forgotten, in the fields...under trees.
In valleys, and on the mountains, we sing their elegies.

Ведь были ж схватки боевые,
Да, говорят, еще какие!
Недаром помнит вся Россия
Про день Бородина!

- Да, были люди в наше время,
Не то, что нынешнее племя:
Богатыри - не вы!
Плохая им досталась доля:
Немногие вернулись с поля...
Не будь на то господня воля,
Не отдали б Москвы!

Мы долго молча отступали,
Досадно было, боя ждали,
Ворчали старики:
"Что ж мы? на зимние квартиры?
Не смеют, что ли, командиры
Чужие изорвать мундиры
О русские штыки?"

И вот нашли большое поле:
Есть разгуляться где на воле!
Построили редут.
У наших ушки на макушке!
Чуть утро осветило пушки
И леса синие верхушки –
Французы тут как тут.

И только небо засветилось,
Все шумно вдруг зашевелилось,
Сверкнул за строем строй.
Полковник наш рожден был хватом:
Слуга царю, отец солдатам...
Да, жаль его: сражен булатом,
Он спит в земле сырой.
И молвил он, сверкнув очами:
"Ребята! не Москва ль за нами?
Умремте же под Москвой,
Как наши братья умирали!"
И умереть мы обещали,
И клятву верности сдержали
Мы в Бородинский бой.

Despite the many bloody clashes
When armies met with weapons flashing,
No wonder everyone in Russia
Recalls Borodino!

Yes, I can tell, my peers were better
Then men today, they had the mettle
For any trial or feat...
They measured up to grimmest challenge
But few survived the bloody carnage,
And God, then willed our strength and
Courage from Moscow to retreat.

The long retreat had made us gloomy.
We yearned to fight. Old-timers, fuming, were grumbling, growing sad:
"What gives? Retreat to winter quarters?
Our chiefs should give us rousing orders
To drive the French beyond our borders with Russian bayonets?"

We stopped and turned in field enormous,
'twas room enough for our purpose.
We built our breastwork high;
And waited ready in alertness.
As soon as dawn lit up the surface
Of cannons, forward-post observers
Could see the French arrive.

All set we faced that fateful morning...
First crack of dawn – all ranks were forming as units were deployed.
Our colonel, born to lead with daring,
For Tzar and soldiers always caring,
Was killed that day, his sabre wearing,
He sleeps in native soil.
But on that morning, still commanding, He said:
"Just west of Moscow standing,
We'll hold the high and low.
Our fathers perished, Moscow shielding!
We pledged our lives,
our weapons wielding,
And kept our faithful oath unyielding...We had Borodino.

Nightingale, You Little Bird - Trad. Russian Soldier Song

The passionate soul of the Slavic soldier is easily attracted to music and “Nightingale, You Little Bird” (or “Solovei Ptashechka,” in transliteration) is one of the most known and loved Russian “soldier songs.” It is a stroevaya (“marching song”) with a simple melody and straight-forward text. The origin of this traditional “soldier song” is unknown, but probably goes back to the times when soldiers were recruited from the poorest masses and the time of service was twenty-five years.

Вдоль по улице широкой молодой солдат идет. Along a broad street a young soldier is coming Он идет, идет, идет громко песенки поет. As he walks, he sings a loud song.

Припев: Chorus:
Соловей-соловей пташечка, эх! Nightingale, nightingale, you tiny, little bird, (Hey!)
Канареечка жалобно поет? Why do you sing like a sad canary?
Раз! два! горе не беда. (One! Two!) These woes are nothing new.
Канареечка жалобно поет. You’re a little canary with a plaintive song.

Полюби меня Наташа молодого да удальца. Will you love me, Natasha? I am young and brave.
Молодого удалого да лихого молодца. A young, brave, fearless lad.

Припев: Chorus:
Соловей-соловей пташечка, эх...! Nightingale, nightingale, you tiny, little bird...!

Если ты меня полюбишь, Бог нас сыном наградит. If you give me your love, God will grant us a son.
Бог нас сыном наградит, генералом учинит. God will grant us a son who will grow up to be a general.

Припев: Chorus:
Соловей-соловей пташечка, эх...! Nightingale, nightingale, you tiny, little bird...!

My Blood is Blazing with Desire – Mikhail Glinka (1804 - 1857)

Mikhail Glinka is most known for his epic opera Ivan Susanin (originally titled A Life for the Tsar) and his many symphonic compositions. His songs and romances for solo voice and small ensembles are beloved by singers and audiences for their charm and the seeming simplicity of the beautiful and graceful melodies. Glinka’s stylized simplicity resembles that of Schubert, hiding the mastery of artistic detail behind the unpretentious façade of a salon impromptu.

“My Blood is Blazing with Desire,” here arranged for a choir of mixed voices, was written in 1838, after Pushkin’s poetic setting of The Song of Songs. Glinka creates a song of immediate allure and enchantment. There is rush of sensuality and an immediate exuberance in its waltz-like sense of motion; perhaps a vivid memory haunts a Russian soldier’s mind as he dreams of his beloved “back home.”

В крови горит огонь желанья, My blood is blazing with desire,
Душа тобой уязвлена, My stricken soul for you does pine.
Лобзай меня: твои лобзанья Oh, kiss me now! Your kisses’ fire
Мне слаще мирра и вина. Is sweeter far than myrrh and wine.
Склонись ко мне главою нежной, Incline your head to me but softly
И да почию безмятежный, And tamed, I’ll linger with you calmly

Пока дохнет веселый день Until the cheerful light of day
И двинется ночная тень. Chases the gloom of night away.

Drum-Taps - Mason Bates (b. 1977)

Mason Bates, Virginia-born and internationally acclaimed, has a career that thrives on ingenuity, surprise and variety. Moving easily between the worlds of “standard” classical music – works for chorus, orchestra, chamber ensembles – and electronica, Bates is busy with commissions from the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Carnegie Hall, Lincoln Center and the Chicago Symphony, where he was appointed the Mead Composer-in-Residence in 2010. Two years later he was the recipient of the Heinz Award for Arts and Humanities. Recent compositions for Chanticleer include a choral song cycle, “Sirens,” commissioned in 2009; “Observer from the Magellanic Cloud,” which dates from 2011; a free arrangement of Peter Gabriel’s “Washing of the Water;” and now, “Drum-Taps,” a joint commission from Chanticleer and the Kennedy Center.

“Drum-Taps” is based on two powerful Civil War poems of Walt Whitman. Bates has fashioned a single text which divides itself into several interlocking sections. Its narrative is clear and, ultimately, heart-breaking. Over a relentless ostinato in the tenor and basses (the sounds of military snare drums) the work begins with a description of the urgency and nervousness of war-time conscription. Young men, mechanics, brick masons, carpenters, lawyers, wagoners, and even judges leave their work, “gathering by common consent and arming.” A more thoughtful and lyrical section describes the beautiful autumn of the Midwest; in fact, a farm in Ohio is the setting for the drama which unfolds as a family receives news that their soldier boy has died. The inexorable rhythm of the drums comes back into play as the last lines describe the mother’s sleepless nights, her poignant desire to be with her “dear, dead son.”

To the drum-taps prompt,
The young men falling in and arming;
The mechanics arming, (the trowel, the jack-plane, the blacksmith’s hammer, tossed aside with precipitation);
The lawyer leaving his office, and arming—the judge leaving the court;
The driver deserting his wagon in the street, jumping down, throwing the reins abruptly down on the horses’ backs;
The salesman leaving the store—the boss, book-keeper, porter, all leaving;
Squads gathering everywhere by common consent, and arming;
The new recruits, even boys,
Outdoors arming—indoors arming—the flash of the musket-barrels;
The white tents cluster in camps—the arm’d sentries around,
Arm’d regiments arrive every day, pass through the city.

The blood of the city up—arm’d! arm’d! the cry everywhere;
The flags flung out from the steeples of churches, and from all the public buildings and stores;
The tearful parting—the mother kisses her son—the son kisses his mother;
(Loath is the mother to part—yet not a word does she speak to detain him;)

Come up from the fields father, here’s a letter from our Pete,
And come to the front door mother, here’s a letter from thy dear son.

Lo, ’tis autumn,
Lo, where the trees, deeper green, yellower and redder,
Cool and sweeten Ohio’s villages with leaves fluttering in the moderate wind,
Where apples ripe in the orchards hang and grapes on the trellis’d vines,
(Smell you the grapes on the vines? Smell you the buckwheat where the bees were lately buzzing?)
