

Non-governmental organization Via Campesina illustrates “Global Community Building” because it involves millions of small-scale farmers and allies from communities around the world collaborating for land reform, sustainable farming, environmental justice, and social justice.

GLOBAL COMMUNITY BUILDING

GLBL 420/520

Learn about pressing topics related to “Global Community Building,” including sustainable and empowering forms of community building, gender justice, community-based conservation, the Global Movement for Black Lives, transnational indigenous and grassroots solidarity, community mobilization and transformation, hybrid approaches synthesizing indigenous and other views, and communal resource management

Though it still appears as a prerequisite, GLBL 240 is no longer required. Please simply email gsl@uoregon.edu for an override to enroll in GLBL 420/520 fulfills the following Professional Concentration Areas: Comparative International Development; Culture, Art & Development; Global Health & Development; International Economics; International Environment; International Gender Issues; Law and Human Rights; and Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution. For the “New major” it counts for Environmental Justice and Resilience; Development Studies; Migration, Refugees and Humanitarian Assistance; Diplomacy, Peace & Conflict Studies; Business, Trade & Tourism; Arts & Identity; Gender, Race & Equality, Law & Human Rights; Food Studies; and Global Health as well as Geographic Focus Areas Africa; Southeast & East Asia; South & Central Asia; Latin America & Caribbean; and North America.

More Information

ASYNCHRONOUS ONLINE COURSE

PROFESSOR DERRICK HINDERY
DHINDERY@UOREGON.EDU

Join us for the 1st
Summer Session!

06/24-07/21
SUMMER '24