

Lillis Business Complex Facts

- First certified environmentally friendly business school facility in the United States (LEED Silver Certification).
- The blue squares embedded in the windows of the Lillis Business Complex are solar cells that generate electricity.
- The Lillis Business Complex has five solar arrays on it, which generate 44kW of the electricity (enough to power seven average-size homes year round).
- The architectural solar glass with the solar cells embedded was the largest (and one of the first) in the United States when it was installed in 2003.
- The Lillis Business Complex opened in 2003. Subsequent complete modernizations and renovations to the historic wings on the west and east of the courtyard (Peterson and Anstett Halls) were completed 2009 and 2011.
- The Lillis Business Complex is named for Chuck and Gwen Lillis. Chuck Lillis earned his PhD in finance at the University of Oregon. Chuck Lillis is a pioneer of the Internet. In the 1990s, he was CEO and chairman of MediaOne, which later became Comcast. Comcast is the company it is today because of Lillis's foresight and vision to see that cable television lines would be used to provide broadband Internet and phone services to individual homes across the country.

UO Lundquist College of Business Facts

- The UO Lundquist College of Business is renowned for its focus on business education in four niche areas: sports business, entrepreneurship, sustainable business and corporate finance.
- The college's Warsaw Sports Marketing Center, founded in 1993, was the first sports management program in the world housed at a business school. It is the top sports business program in the country for students interested in careers in sports business.
- Bloomberg BusinessWeek 2011 ranked the Lundquist College of Business undergraduate program fourth on West Coast and 12th in nation for marketing management.
- U.S. News & World Report 2011 ranked the Lundquist College of Business 26th in nation among public business schools
- Entrepreneur magazine and The Princeton Review in September 2011 rated the college's Entrepreneurship program, the Lundquist Center for Entrepreneurship, the 25th best in the nation.
- Giving students opportunities to learn by doing--working on real projects for real companies while still in school--is a hallmark of the UO Lundquist College of Business education.